Acupuncture

Food Categories

Each type of food has inherent energies – not the physical, objective temperature of the food, but the food's own energy and its effect on body temperature. In general, cooked foods are more warming than raw foods and root vegetables are warmer than other parts of the plant.

COLD

bamboo shoots, clam, crab, water chestnut, banana, kelp, grapefruit, watermelon

COOL

cucumber, barley, egg white, lettuce, mango, radish, strawberry, wheat, apple, tofu, eggplant, loquat, pear, spinach, tangerine, wheat bran

NEUTRAL

apricot, carrot, celery, corn, pork, peanuts, milk, almonds, plum, yams, beef, potato, whole eggs, grapes, kidney beans, pineapple, olive, papaya, rice, white sugar

WARM

cherry, chicken, dates, ginger, ham, peach, leek, pumpkin, vinegar, chestnut, chive, garlic, green onion, raspberry, nectarine, lamb, summer squash, sunflower seeds

HOT

black pepper, dried ginger, cayenne, cinnamon, bell peppers, soybean oil

HEAT REDUCING

asparagus, banana, elderflower, lettuce, mung bean sprout, salt, wheat, eggplant, chicken egg white, grapefruit, millet, peppermint, tofu, bamboo shoot, clam, lemon, potato, watermelon (In chronic conditions Heat is simply treated by the avoidance of hot foods and the use of more cooling foods and methods of food preparation. Where there is a pathogenic invasion, the pungent flavor is used to drive the hot invader to the surface of the body.)
